This passage described 'The Greenwood Boys', a group of pop singers~~s~~ visiting around the country, and they received a warm welcome by the local people. They were so popular that police had to be gathered to maintain the order.

"Pop" is short for popular. ^{the music} ~~The~~ Pop-music is very ^{prevalent} popular among young people, especially teenagers, ^{the} which is usually consisted~~s~~ of simple tunes and a strong beat. It began in 1960's when a group of boys ^{from} of Liverpool ~~boys~~ formed a group called The Beatles. Soon it spread across Britain, other European countries and America.

Other famous groups included ^{ABBA} ~~ABBA~~ from Sweden. The popularity of pop-music also contributed to its mixed elements of Jazz and Rock. Often, electronically amplified equipment ~~was~~ used ~~to~~ ^{work together} with guitar, violins, drum and other instruments.

Usually, pop ~~singer~~ ^{singers} travel from one place to another, and they always receive a warm welcome, especially by young people because Pop singers ~~air~~ their voices. Unlike conventional performances, pop music usually plays in stadium, ^{which} where can help singers to interact with their audiences. As there are too many enthusiastic followers, sometimes ~~there have~~ unexpected things ^{that} happen in those large gathering~~s~~, which might trigger ~~the~~ large-scale disorder. Thus, it is not uncommon that the police come to keep order at the sites. [204]
