

Barbara Szekais 2019-11-12

This passage is about a story of a parcel with precious diamonds.

The title 'too late' implies something bad happened. The An informer bought the information ^{about the possible theft} on ongoing stealing to the police, and ^{the} police believed the informer and went to the airport to stop the thieves. When the story went on, we can see that most probably, the diamonds had been removed from the parcel and replaced it with ~~(another parcel full of)~~ stones and sand.

With the advancement of technology, the police have more advanced tools to find thieves, while the thieves also get smarter because there are always bugs and weak spots even in ~~the~~ state-of-art security systems or carefully planned police actions. The status quo is that both thieves and police are racing to win, which is commonly ^{ed} referred to as a 'cat-and-mouse game.' When you read this passage carefully, you can see the possible leaks in this police action which might be taken advantage ^{of} of (the thieves).

[159]

revised 2019-11-12