This passage is about the impacts of tourism on people of a small village.

There was a 'cursed tree' which has attracted tourists, however some local people did not like it because they believed that the tree would bring bad luck. Tourism is a big industry in most of places with special views.

Generally speaking, travel industries has two sides to local people. On the one hand, tourists bring huge income to local stores, hotels and restaurants etc.

It is obviously good for creating jobs, and improving local infrastructures such as adding roads and bridges. On the other hand, tourism brings pollutions such as noises and wastes etc. This clearly disturbs the everyday life of the area as people can no longer work and live as they once were.

Tourism may also change the established culture of the local communities on a long run. In fact, no one can escape the influences of the outside world.

and a good balance between the increase of economic income and acceptance of unwelcome impacts is becoming important. It is not easy to satisfy everybody; nevertheless, any key decisions should meet the expectations of the majority of people affected, and help to promote sustainable development of the local communities.
