In English we can often say things in many different ways. One good example of this is what we say when we ^{are} ~~have~~ leaving someone.

We usually said 'Goodbye' or simply 'Bye'. ^{to} Nowadays, the popular ones are 'See you later' or 'See you'. When people go away for a long time, 'Farewell', 'Goodbye and all the best' or 'Goodbye and good luck' are frequently ^{Goodbye} ~~be~~ used to express these good wishes as in this passage.

Even today, ^{ing} ~~across~~ the ocean still is a long journey; for example, it takes four days for a liner to cross the Atlantic from England ^{and} to America. Today, despite that fact that a lot of ships ~~having~~ state of art equipment, crossing the ocean by small boats ^{have} ~~are~~ still considered difficult and even dangerous, especially when the weather is not good. This requires a lot of courage, great skills and good luck. In the big sea, there are unexpected things ^{that} ~~happened~~ ^{is} now and then. However, people still are proud of those ~~who~~ risk takers and call them heroes.
