This passage is about a seemingly funny presentation looked like ^{which from child's view} at the eyes ^s of a child. It is common that someone makes funny speeches at ^{parties} parties to motivate people and in a hope to create a good atmosphere for events.

However, different people have their own interpretations about certain remarks. To understand a joke required ^s speakers to have a good background knowledge of the culture of audiences, ability to use suitable language, and ^{to have an} find ^{the audience's cultures} good ways to ~~organize the~~ joke, because the combinations of these elements ^{make} bring the funny situation. For example, not everyone laughs at a joke as it is not suited for all occasions. If you tell a joke ^{specific about locations} of one region to people of ^{from} other locations may not be funny ~~another's~~, sometimes it will bring opposite effects. Moreover, every language has its own funny elements, which are handed down for generations. The use of language and its ^{effects} organization often need years of ^{acquisition} accumulation by studying and using it. To make funny remarks to cater for all listeners must apply those skills in an innovative way which is certainly ~~is~~ a hard task.
