This passage is about a robbery. The woman in the story risked her life to catch the thieves. It is controversial whether people should stop a robbery or stealing by immediate actions. Many companies have rules to prohibit employees ^{from} taking actions in these cases. On the other hand, some people still think to stop a crime such as robbery, stealing, ^{or} burglary is a heroic act. I believe we should think about risks involved before take any actions for the following reasons. First of all, the only goal of robbery or thieves is to take your goods away. When you run after those people, the situation might be escalated. They may take dangerous measures to anyone who intend to stop them. Your life is worth more than any of the goods lost. Additionally, your actions may cause other innocent people to hurt as those ^{be} ~~people~~ ^{robbers} go mad if they think they will be caught. Moreover, you are not prepared for the event and your attempt to stop them ^{might} ~~is~~ ^{this kind of situation} most probably not work well. Thus, the good strategy is to quickly alert security guards or policemen and let these professionals ~~to~~ handle it.
